Theorising Collaborative Policy Action on Climate Change

This project, funded by a research grant of the University of Waikato, is about exploring ways of designing a model of collaborative action on climate change. Our aim is to understand, analyse, and map the perspectives, actions and relationships within and amongst climate action activist groups on to selected policy change frameworks. The overall aim of the project is to find ways of catalysing system change on policy making on climate change, especially in the context of New Zealand.

Your participation will involve taking part in an interview for 30-60 minutes, at a mutually agreeable place and time. We will, with your approval, use an audio-recorder and transcribe the information. Once analysed, the information/views gleaned from the interviews will be used in publishable research articles, academic reports, presentations, and material for dissemination to policy makers and the public.

Your confidentiality and anonymity is assured throughout and your identity will not be disclosed without your consent.

If you take part in the study, you have the right to:

- Refuse to answer any particular question, and to withdraw from the study until a date up to four weeks after the interview.
- Ask any further questions about the study that occurs to you during your participation.
- Be given access to a summary of the findings from the study when it is concluded.

If you have any questions about this research project you can contact the researchers whose contact details are provided below.
